

PRIME MINISTER · PREMIER MINISTRE

Message from the Prime Minister of Canada

It is with great pleasure that I welcome everyone to Vancouver for the Canadian National Conference of the World Community for Christian Meditation (WCCM).

Faith brings tremendous value to our communities and teaches valuable lessons to practitioners. The WCCM offers an opportunity to reflect upon the teachings of your faith and how you can use these teachings to better the lives of your loved ones.

The WCCM advances many causes, including the environment, the theme of this year's National Conference. I would like to thank Kaveh Guilanpour for being this year's keynote speaker and sharing his expertise on the environment and climate change. The fight against climate change will require action from both governments and civilians. I hope during this conference all participants are able to further their knowledge on the role they can play in combating the effects of climate change.

Please accept my warmest regards.
